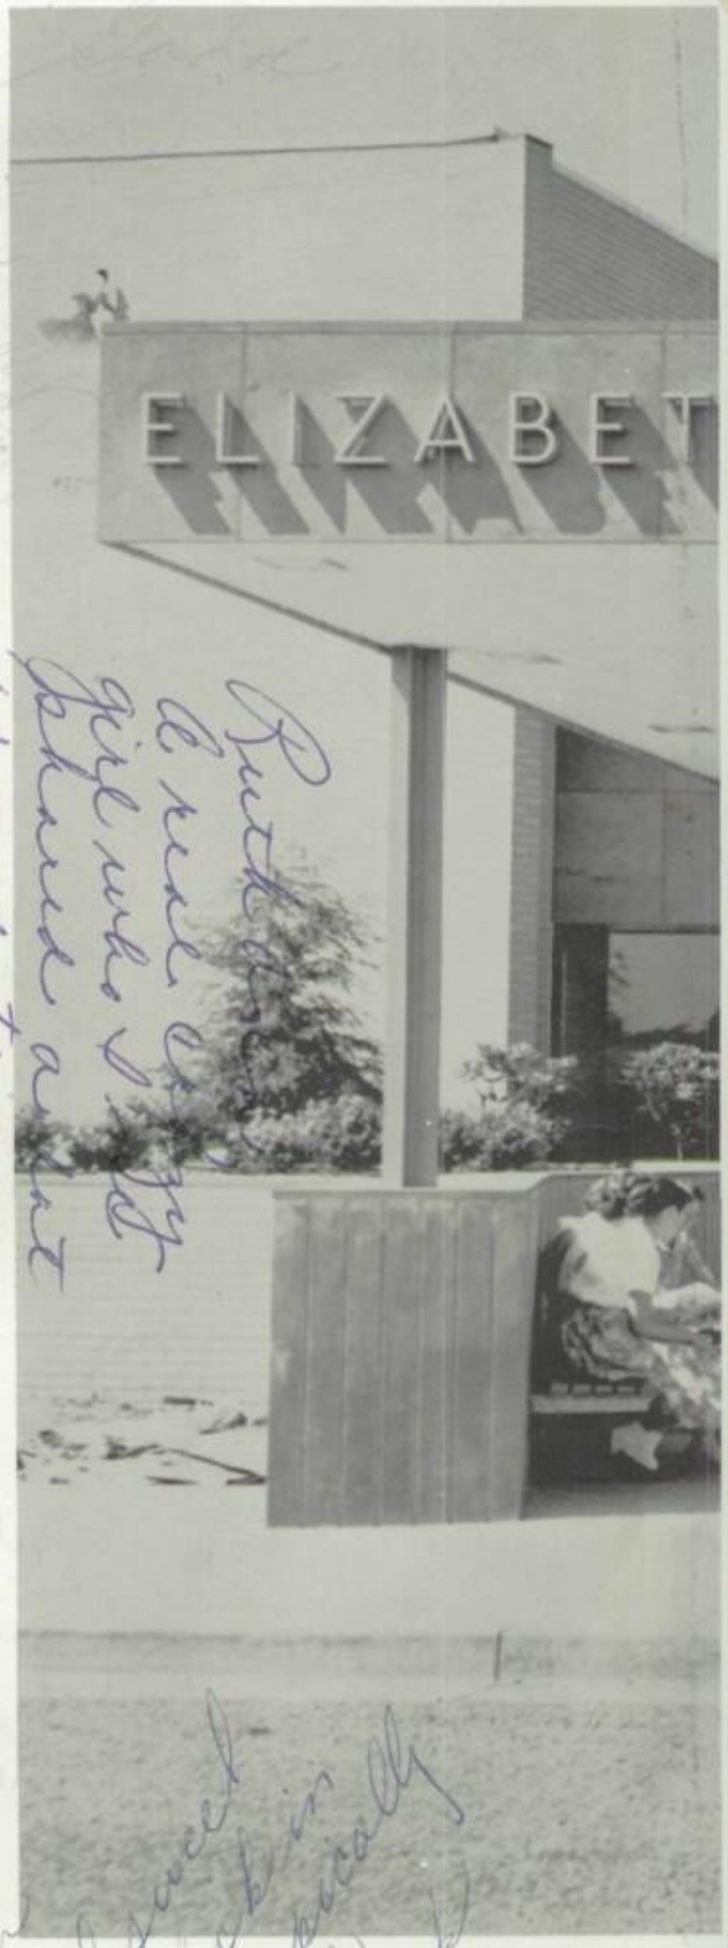
The 1958 ELI-MON

Elizabeth Forward High School
Elizabeth, Pennsylvania
Seventh Edition

In this, the seventh edition of the Eli-Mon, the staff has tried to link the memories of the past with the dreams of the future. Old "Betsy" has been put aside, but none of the students will forget the fond memories that were always part of her, for no matter how dingy she may have looked on the outside, there was always a warm home-like atmosphere within.

The students and faculty are the real heart of "Betsy" and only those who laughed and worked and studied behind her doors can know just how fond are our memories of her.

Yes, we will learn to love the new building, but only if we can keep the friendly attitude that we have always known. We must remember the good things and take them with us to make the new "Betsy" even better than the old in every way.



Ruth Ann
Well lets see, what can I write about a crazy person like you. Ahem!! I'm only kidding, really I am. You are really one of the sweetest persons I have ever met and one that I hope will always be my friend. Remember all the fun we have had together this year, especially at the "prom". I don't know when I have ever had a more wonderful time. Good luck, you'll probably end up "married"

To the Students of Elizabeth-Forward High School:

We have many people to thank for this wonderful building; the board of education, school authority, architects, contractors, and workers. It has been a tremendous undertaking and required vision, foresight, and faith on the part of all these people.

Many visitors have remarked that it would be a pleasure to attend school in a building such as ours. I hope that the students are properly appreciative of the advantages offered.

Recalling the statement, "Clothes do not make the man," neither does a new building make a complete high school. We must consider the program for the students. We of the faculty are putting forth our best efforts to supply an adequate program to fit the students for later life.

You, as students, have a role to play in our new high school. It is your duty to form the traditions and rules by which others and future student bodies are governed. May you, in this first year, develop a closely related student body with a deep sense of responsibility and loyalty to your school—Elizabeth-Forward High School.

Sincerely,

JAMES N. SHAVER
Principal

With the dawning of the day - - -

They hurry on their way - - -

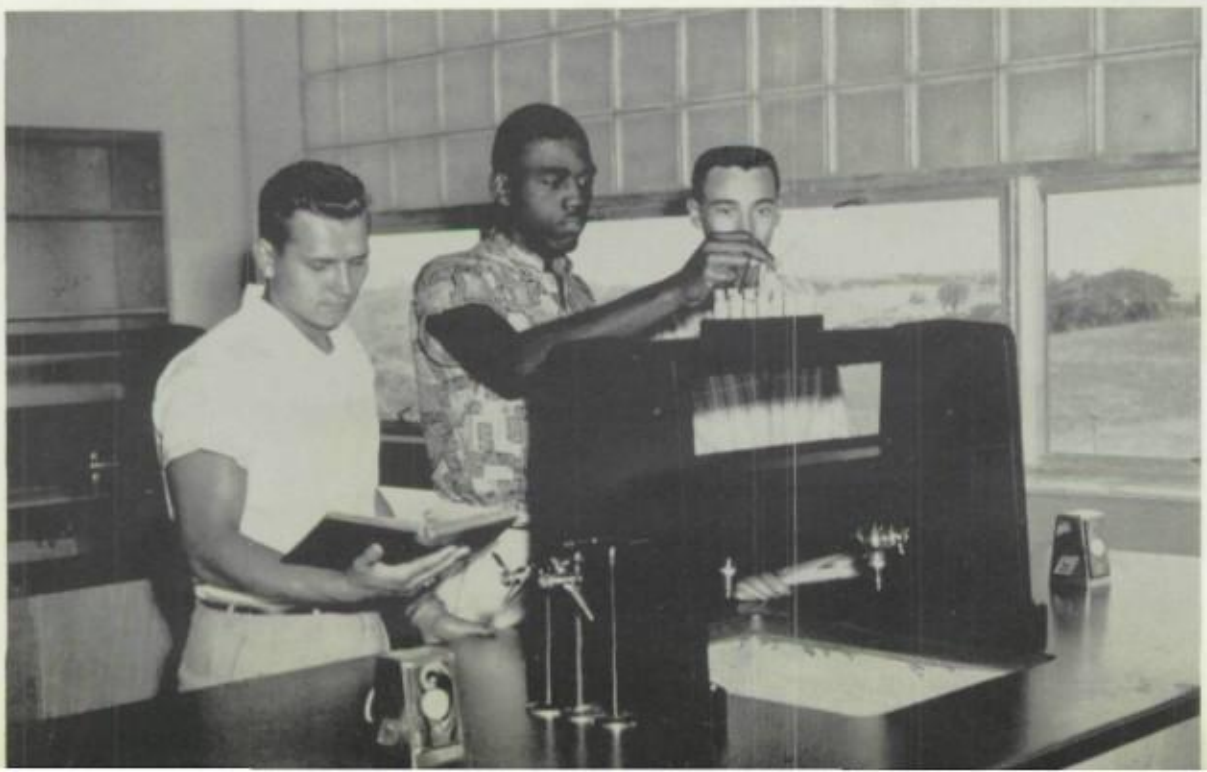
"Let's go, kids, or we'll be late,

And then in class we'll never rate!"

These cabinets will soon be filled,

Here, little plants will start to grow.

Chemicals will be put to use,

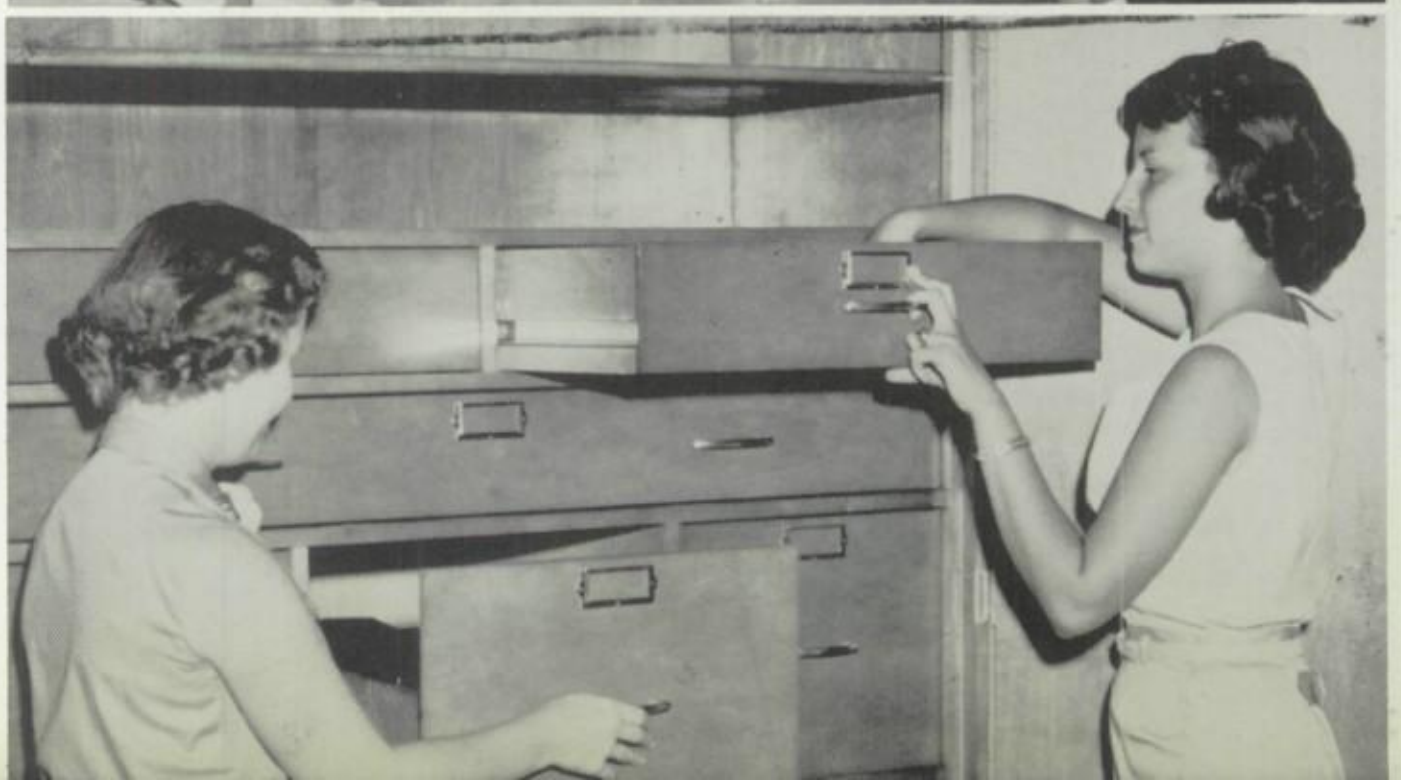


and progress will begin to show.

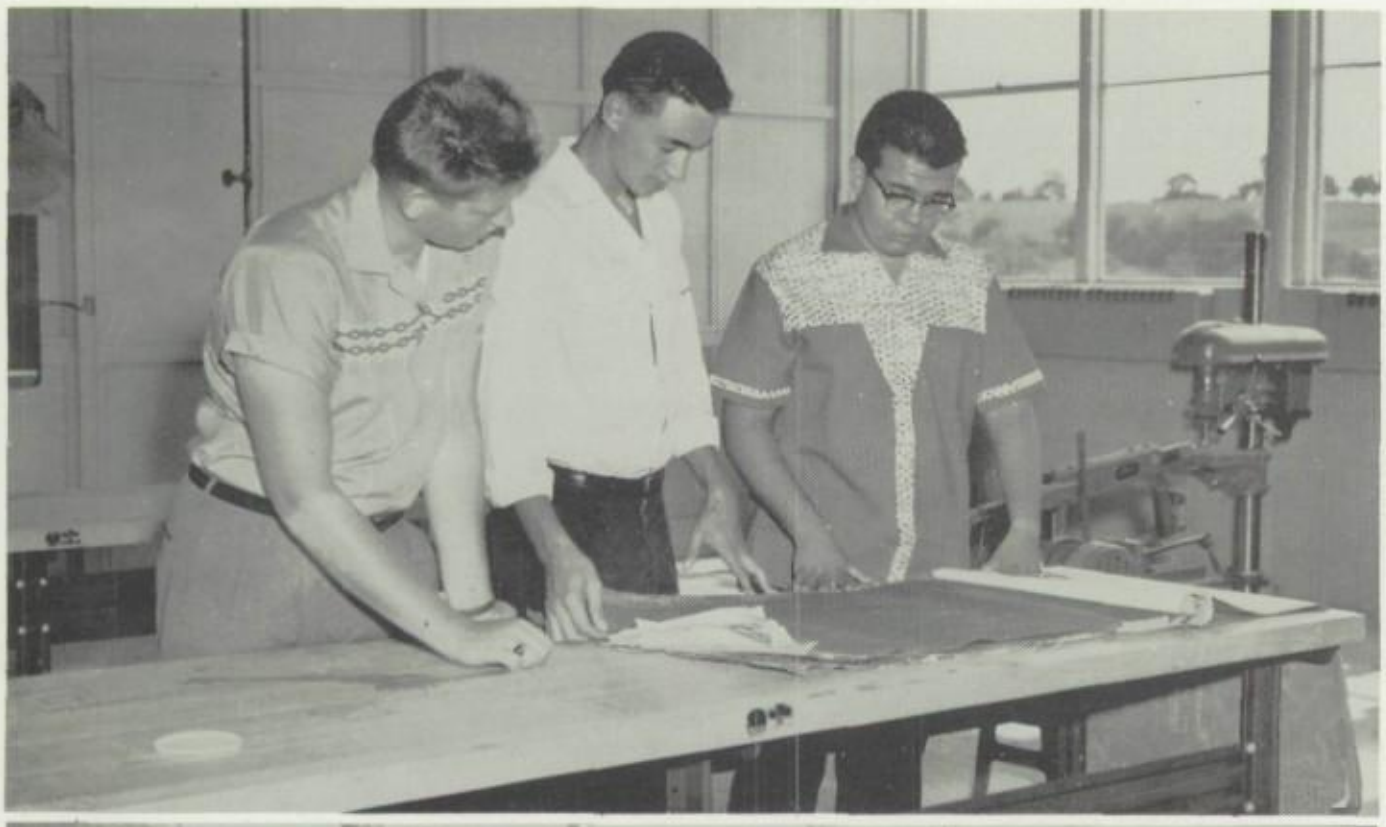
This seamstress strikes a pretty pose.

"Wonder if this is where the garbage goes?"

"In here are the patterns for our clothes."



"Good! It's almost time to eat."



"These blueprints surely do look neat."

"This project we will soon complete."

Everyone wants to get in the act.

How much gossip?

How much fact?

These students by the school are backed.

"I'd like a book about romance."

The chorus will cast you into a trance.

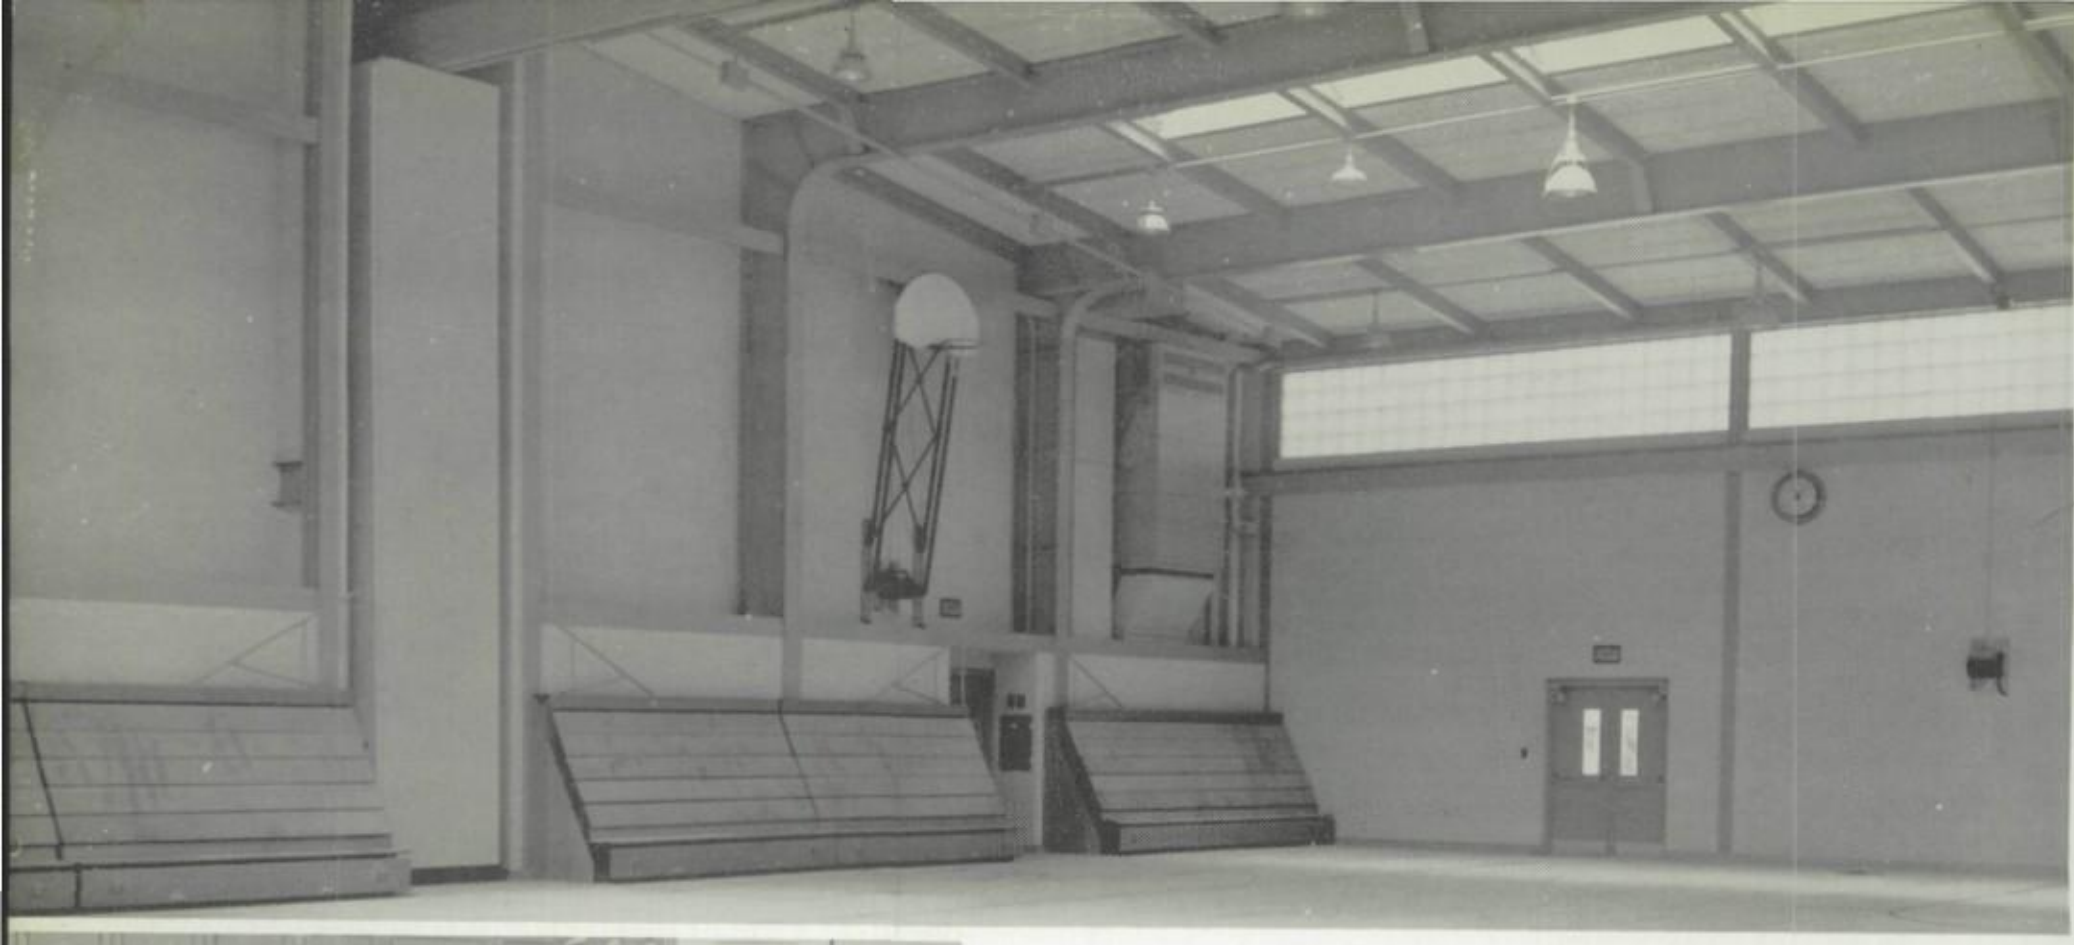
"Grab that drink, and then let's prance!"



Here many victories will be won.

"Let's get set for the starting gun!"

"Don't be afraid, she's lots of fun!"

"May I have an assembly ticket, please?"

"Let's hope the speaker doesn't sneeze!"

"That assembly went like a breeze!"

After the final class of the day,

It's time to put our work away.

"This '58 yearbook is really O.K.!"

"How nice to sit and dream this way."

Which Will It Be?

Dedications Are Effected

The September morning sun glimmered on the massive stone building situated majestically on the green hilltop. The Elizabeth-Forward High School building was new, and much of the student body was new; however, the foundation of an active school life had already been laid, waiting to be tended by the wisdom and maturity of the senior class.

There was much to be done: a fine well-equipped school to be admired and respected; new faculty members and students to be met and welcomed; schedules to be learned and followed; organizations to be developed and governed; a sports program to be conducted successfully; and proud traditions to be maintained. All of these were responsibilities to be faced by all of the students, but by seniors particularly because it was they who would set the pattern for others.

As the days and six-week periods passed, seniors became increasingly aware of doing things for the last time, and they gradually began to comprehend the significance of being the first class to be graduated from the new Elizabeth-Forward High School. They knew that their pride could be justified only in so far as they had been successful in marking the way for the many succeeding classes.

They were going to miss their beautiful new home-away-from-home, and on their last spring evening on the lovely campus, they watched the lengthening shadows with increasing awareness of the challenges that faced them as alumni of this school.

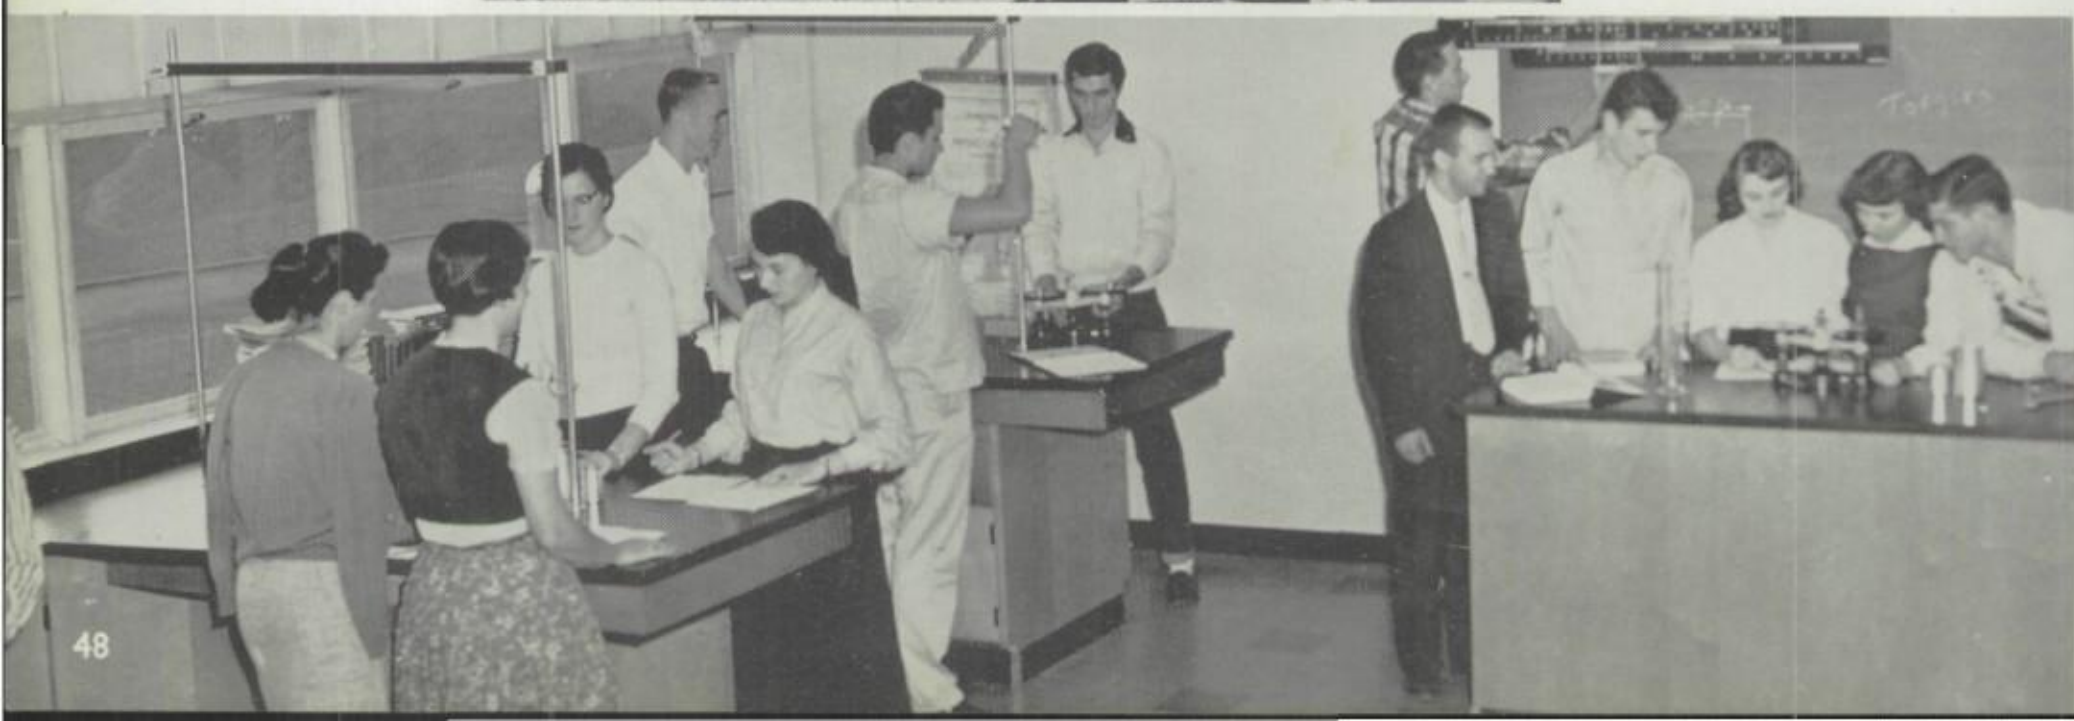
Guidance Counselors Help Students Make Wise Vocational Choices Whether in the Arts or Sciences.

All Photos by BENACK



Building Blocks Are Set

The juniors approached the opening of school in 1957 with many conflicting emotions: curiosity, interest, pleasure, and not a little apprehension about how well they had laid foundations and how sturdily they had built frameworks upon which to set the building blocks which would complete their secondary education. They were entering upon the last half of their high school years, and it was important that everything be just right.

There were so many things fighting for top place in their minds: vocational decisions to be reached, subjects to be mastered, club leadership responsibilities to be understudied, a prom that would surpass all previous proms, senior athletic positions shifting to their shoulders, and above all, the desire to be worthy of all that their parents and teachers expected of juniors working in a wonderful new building.

Yes, it was quite a challenge — one that required maturity, foresight, and the ability to seek and accept advice if at the completion of this year they were to see their "building" approaching completion.

Spring — and the Prom came and brought to the class of 1959 the sharp realization that if they were really to be the young adults that they looked to be at the Prom, they still had one tremendous job to do, to resolve individually and personally to enter upon their senior year with the determination to take this one last chance to make of their educations a "Building" as proud and fine in every way as the new high school which had become such a vital part of their lives.

FRAMEWORKS ARE ERECTED

The class of 1960 came to the beginning of their second year of high school with mixed emotions. They had just come through a year of feeling lost and bewildered in new surroundings, and then, there they were again — strangers in a new environment. However, their previous experiences gave them a slight advantage, so it wasn't long before they were beginning to feel adjusted and were carefully starting to erect the framework of their high school education.

This was an important step ahead, and it was up to the sophomores to see that this framework was built strongly and reinforced with wise decisions, hard work, increasing sense of responsibility, and the determination to make of their education a "structure" of which everyone would be proud.

They spent many hours trying to decide just which vocational possibilities held the most interest for them. Girls dreamed of themselves as crisply efficient nurses in stiffly starched white uniforms or as smartly dressed indispensable secretaries; boys enjoyed pictures of themselves as mechanics, covered with necessary black grime as they climbed out of grease pits after having finished a job on a new model car, or as famous pilots stepping out of jet planes that had just broken all speed records.

With the coming of spring, the class of '60 awoke to the realization that their high school years were half over and that their final "building" would depend largely upon what they had already accomplished.

Foundations Are Laid

Members of the Elizabeth-Forward High School Class of 1961 were in a unique position . . . theirs would be the first class to spend all of their high school years in the bright new building.

As they began upon their high school career in September 1957, they felt no more strange or bewildered by new surroundings than did any of the older students. Their days of becoming oriented were filled with: following schedules and school maps, trying to remember which names fit which faces, making new friends, renewing old acquaintances, deciding which clubs to join, becoming familiar with routine, learning to study efficiently . . . in short, doing their level best to lay foundation stones upon which they could build their high school education.

As the months went by and the freshmen neared the end of their "foundation laying" they became eager to continue their building as sophomores who would erect the framework of the structure that would someday emerge as their secondary education.

Gary Gephart says it with music at the console of the new organ in the auditorium.

The 1958 Eli-Mon staff members have been pleased to conduct you on a tour of our new building. We want to thank our patrons, administration, faculty, and student body for their generous cooperation. A very special thank you also to "Tony" from Strem Studio and Gene Burke from Taylor Publishing Company for their ever-willing help.
